Subject: Your Unsatisfactory Performance

To Whom It May Concern:

The solution you have reached is highly inadequate. No doubt reached too early because of either the Judge Kollar-Kotelly's desire to wrap it up quickly, (because speed is always in the interest of justice,) or the obnoxious inanity of the simpering saps that Microsoft has hired for attorneys. You must understand that this is not a solution. There are no provisions to prevent Microsoft from remaining the horrible anti-competitive monster that it still is. In case you haven't seen Windows XP the situation is not getting better with age. Bundling of software, underhanded deals, and wanton railroading of any innovative or competitive idea have become staples of Microsoft business practices. I realized a Republican administration meant I would once again have to learn to swallow the bitter pill of if the moral majority, and a pro-business attitude that would sicken any mortal man, but you've got to be kidding me. Machiavelli would be a better corporate citizen! How could the justice department turn a blind eye to a software juggernaut responsible for the jamming their incredibly inept software onto anything with a processor capable of running it, and a hard drive big enough to store such bloat ware. I hope you folks sleep well at night, because the faint glimmering hope I had in the justice system has been obliterated.

Yours, most disappointedly,

Mr. Seth D. Kramer
